Current U. S. Labor Union Periodicals

Abstract

The Catherwood Library has been building and maintaining a collection of union literature since it was founded in 1946. Among the key resources of this collection are our extensive holdings of labor union periodicals. In addition to the current and historic titles that can be found in our library, many labor union periodicals are now available on the web. This bibliography lists Cornell University Library location information for current U.S. labor union periodicals as well as Internet sites for periodicals in this class.

INTRODUCTION

This is a survey of current U. S. labor union periodicals. It replaces a smaller survey that was published at this URL in 2006. This listing includes all of the current U. S. labor union periodicals that are found on the shelves of the Catherwood Library, School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University. In addition, an attempt has been made to find current periodicals for the largest labor unions; for all national, international, and independent unions that have a U.S. base; for Change to Win; and for AFL-CIO departments and statewide bodies. Selected other Internet-based labor union periodicals are also included. "Current" was considered to be content that was post-January 2008. "Periodicals" were considered to be print newsletters and journals, as well as Internet periodicals, blogs, and organized news pages. No serious attempt was made to find current print union periodical titles in libraries other than Catherwood.

The collection of U. S. labor union periodicals at the Catherwood Library is one of its most unique and important assets. Union newsletters and "official organs" provide a means to learn about the everyday life, working conditions, and hopes for the future of American working people. A union periodical issue might contain lists of workers lost in industrial accidents, information about wages and working conditions, discussions of policy issues and political action initiatives, pictures of union members and leaders, human interest stories, and even a few recipes. Researchers have used union periodicals to provide historical insight, to find evidence in employment and labor litigation, and to find out if they are owed disability or survivor benefits.

In the Catherwood book stacks are examples of journals that have morphed from thick, glossy tomes into two to three page fliers, and in recent years print issues are disappearing altogether, being replaced by electronic-only formats. During the last 10 years, even the AFL-CIO has dropped its print periodicals and replaced them with the AFL-CIO Now Blog. The other major U.S. labor federation, Change to Win, founded in 2005, has never had a periodical, but maintained a blog, CTWConnect, from 2007 until earlier this year. Unions are also joining social media sites, such as Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, etc., and communicating with their members and the public through these services. For the periodicals that continue to exist, titles are in constant flux and are discontinued or changed as unions merge, change affiliations, are absorbed, or disband.

The listing below contains 95 U. S. labor union periodicals that are currently received in print at the Catherwood Library. This number can be compared with 121 listed in the 2006 survey and approximately 219 as recently as 1991.<sup>1</sup>

There are many challenges to creating a stable listing of union periodicals. As David Levine said of his 1940 attempt to do so, "Any directory of the American labor press is subject to the inaccuracies consequent to the high mortality among such publications."<sup>2</sup> Thus, this listing should only be regarded as a snapshot in time, specifically November 2010.

At the end of this listing are three appendices. Appendix 1 is a short study on the fate of the current U.S. labor union periodicals that were identified in 2006. The study tracks the 2006 periodicals and records which have survived, changed format, become unavailable, or been archived.

Appendix 2 contains an analysis of the communication methods for unions with 10,000 or more members. It reports on the number of unions in this category that have web pages and periodicals. It also reports on the format of the periodicals and the number of unions using social media sites. The website listings that accompany this study may be of interest to researchers as a way to glean other information about labor unions. The listings contain extensive keywords copied from the union websites that include union industries, occupations, and companies. It is also possible to sort these websites by membership size category, type of union, and other criteria.

Appendix 3 contains an annotated bibliography that lists additional sources for researching labor union publications.

The periodical listings below as well as the information presented in the appendices have been downloaded into RefShare and CiteuLike databases.

Current U. S. Labor Union Periodicals (2010)

APPENDIX 1—FATE OF PERIODICALS LISTED IN 2006.

This study reports on the fate of the union periodicals that were listed in the publication, Current U.S. Labor Union Periodicals, which was compiled in 2002 and published, with revisions, at this URL in 2006. The publication contained names and locations for 200 U. S. labor union periodicals.

The 2006 listing contained 3 errors. Therefore, 197 of the 200 periodicals listed were tracked to determine if they were still being published and, for the journals that had been available on the Internet, if they were still available there.

The 197 titles included 121 paper titles subscribed to by the Catherwood Library. 40 of the titles were only available in paper format. 81 were dual-format, with holdings in paper and on the Internet. The 2006 listing also included 76 Internet-only periodicals. When this number was combined with the 81 dual-format periodicals, the result was 157 periodicals with some Internet content.

Method

This study was conducted in November 2010.

Links and shelf locations for the periodicals listed in Current U. S. Labor Union Periodicals (2006) were checked to see if these locations were still valid.

When it was necessary, the search was expanded to the labor unions' and their successors' websites to discover revised URLs for the 2006 titles or to find new periodicals or name changes. If new issues of the print periodicals were not found at Catherwood, the union names and periodical titles were searched in the WorldCat catalog in an effort to find current holdings in other U.S. libraries.

Information about holdings and formats was recorded in a relational database. If previous online content had disappeared, that was also noted.

The 2006 titles were then categorized as either "current," if there were holdings post-2008, or "inactive," if there were no post-2008 holdings, or if there were other indications that the periodical was no longer being published.

Because a high percentage of the 2006 URLs were no longer valid, these URLs were inserted into the Internet Archive's WaybackMachine's search box to see if they had been archived. The Labor Unions and Organizations \(U.S.\) Web Archive from the Robert F. Wagner Labor Archives, Tamiment Library, New York University was also searched for any remaining titles that were not found elsewhere.

Results

Current status and format of the 2006 periodicals

70 of the 197 U. S. labor union periodicals listed in the 2006 version of Current U.S. Labor Union Periodicals were inactive in 2010. This number included 15 paper, 32 Internet, and 23 dual-format periodicals. The disappearance of nine of these periodicals can perhaps be attributed to the concurrent disappearance of their publisher unions. This can be confirmed to be the case for the periodicals from the Paper, Allied-Industrial, Chemical and Energy Worker International Union (PACE) and from the American Flint Glass Workers. Both of these unions have been absorbed by the United Steelworkers. The merger of the National Association of Air Traffic Specialists (NAATS) with the National Association of Air Traffic Controllers can account for the loss of another periodical. Six other publications appear to have become inactive because of the inactivity of their local-union publishers, as no current mention of the unions can be found on the Internet. For the 61 remaining inactive journals there is no evidence that their unions have become inactive. All of these unions maintain websites, and several, such as the AFL-CIO itself, AFSCME, and the Teamsters, are among the largest U.S. labor unions.

The remaining 127 journals were still being produced. However, there were changes in the format of these. The most obvious change in format was the increase in dual format periodicals.

Table 1 provides statistics on the changes from 2006-2010 that occurred to the 197 journals tracked in this study.

Format	Active Periodicals 2006 Number   percent each format	Active Periodicals 2010 Number   percent each format	Change % each format 2006-2010	Inactive Periodicals 2010 Number   percent each format

Some Internet	157   79.7%	100   78.7%	-1%	55   78.6%

As shown in Table 1, Internet periodicals became inactive at a higher rate than the periodicals produced in paper. Of the inactive journals, 78.6% had an Internet format and 54.3% had a paper format. When comparing the inactive journals with only one format, more than twice as many with Internet-only formats became inactive.

For the journals that did not become inactive during the period from 2006-2010, the biggest change was the increase of dual-format periodicals. Further examination of the data and common sense tells us that this increase was caused by the addition of an Internet format to a previously paper-only title. To see which periodicals have added Internet content, look for the phrase, "New to Internet," in the RefShare database.

2010 availability of 2006 Internet Periodicals

There were bad links for 115 of the 157 URLs (73.2%) listed in the 2006 version of Current U.S. Labor Union Periodicals. However, updated links with no loss of content were found for 24 of these. In addition, 79 of the 2006 URLs had been archived by the Internet Archive or the Wagner Archives. The archived location was the only option for viewing 40 of the 2006 Internet-only titles whose URLs were no longer operational.

In all, there were only 12 previously-available Internet periodicals that were now inaccessible on the web (bad link and no archive). Luckily, the loss of Internet access to these periodicals was not catastrophic because there were also paper copies of the journals in U. S. libraries for 10 of the 12.

Table 2 summarizes the 2010 options for access to the Internet-based periodicals from 2006.

Discussion/Conclusion

The clearest take-away from this study is that U. S. labor union periodicals, particularly those available on the Internet, are a somewhat fleeting resource. Web-archives have been demonstrated to serve an important function in maintaining access to these publications, especially for those that were never available in paper.

It should be noted that the change in format data reflect only the aggregate formats of the 127 active journals from the 2006 listing. The formats are not necessarily reflective of U. S. labor union periodicals in general. The study reported in Appendix 2 on the periodicals from the largest labor unions is more indicative of the trends in general.

Data from this study are available via RefShare databases:

APPENDIX 2: FORMAT OF U. S. LABOR UNION PERIODICALS AND OTHER MEANS OF LABOR UNION COMMUNICATION

This study is an attempt to create a 2010 snapshot of the prevalence and form of current periodicals produced by U.S. labor unions with 10,000 or more members. In the course of creating a survey of the union periodicals from these largest unions, other information was gathered about union communications.

Methods

656 labor unions with 10,000 or more members were identified, using data made available on the UnionReports.gov website from the U. S. Department of Labor's Office of Labor Management Standards and also data available on the individual unions' websites.<sup>3</sup>

Periodical shelves at Catherwood were checked for periodicals from these unions. Titles and holdings information were entered into a relational database.

Internet searches were then done for all 656 unions. The unions' names and alternative names were entered into the Google search engine and the first page results were examined to ascertain the unions' official websites.

Websites were visited and data were recorded in a database. Specifically, the presence of current union periodicals or mention of current union periodicals was noted, along with any websites that contained periodical content, the format of that content, and holdings available. When the unions' websites indicated the existence of a periodical, but full text could not be found on the site or at the Catherwood Library, other locations were searched for using the Worldcat library catalog. However, Worldcat was not searched for the unions' names to find periodicals from the largest unions if there were no indications on the websites that periodicals existed in non-Internet format.

This study was concerned with labor union periodicals, but other data available on the websites were also recorded. Most germane to this study was whether or not the union had a presence on social media sites. This information could be useful for predicting new methods through which unions are communicating. Whether or not the union participated in social media was determined by indication on its homepage, for instance, Facebook or Twitter symbols. Social media sites themselves were not searched for union participants.

Another area of interest, sparked by the results of the study in Appendix 1, was whether or not the union website was being archived. It was assumed, primarily from the experiences in the previous study, that most of the important union websites were being archived in some manner via the WaybackMachine. However, some of these unions are also included in the Wagner Archive's, Tamiment Library, New York University more concerted efforts. When this was the case, it was noted.

Finally, it was observed that many union websites required member sign-on for access to some materials. These materials could include union periodicals as well as collective bargaining agreements, convention proceedings, and other documents. It was noted in the database if a member sign-on was present.

<sup>3</sup> Note: The listing of largest unions accompanying this study should be regarded as best-effort. There are several problems involved with identifying union membership: incomplete data for any one year; incomplete union names; missing data; etc.

Results

Websites were found for 528 (80.5%) of the unions. At least one periodical title was found for 251 unions (38.2%), and 67 unions produced more than one periodical. In all, there were 365 periodicals. 146 of the unions participated with social media sites. 64 of the unions' websites had been archived by the Wagner Archives.

Table 3 outlines the format of the periodicals in this study.

*"Unknown" was used to label electronic periodicals that were available only after signing on as a union member.

156 of the largest labor unions had a member sign-on option on their websites.

Discussion/Conclusion

The Internet is being employed by unions for communicating with their members and the public. Over 80% of large unions have websites. The Internet was the most popular means for providing access to labor union periodicals. Of the 365 periodicals discovered, 333 had some Internet content and 267 had Internet content only. However, even when the criteria for what constituted a periodical were fairly lax, only 38% of these largest unions had an identifiable periodical.

Pdfs were the most common format for Internet periodicals. Adobe Flash® was used to enhance online reading by simulating the experience of turning pages. Blogs are also being employed by many large unions, such as the AFL-CIO and the Machinists' union. Using blogs allows the union to insert video and links to outside content. In addition, blogs are a good way for a union to archive its news pages, but not all unions are employing this feature. For a blog to be counted as a periodical for this study, it had to have some organization, such as by time period or subject.

For the largest unions, only 98 had paper journals in the Catherwood Library. Although it is true that the number of paper union periodicals as a whole in Catherwood has decreased, the numbers in this study are not comparable with those in the Appendix 1 study. That study dealt with all periodicals in Catherwood, not just those from the largest unions. It is also possible that the largest unions had paper periodicals that were not part of the collection at Catherwood.

The continued use and popularity of social media sites is a trend worth noting. 22.3% of the largest unions have a presence on these sites, but social media could soon be even more popular with small unions as an inexpensive way to communicate with their members and supporters.

The Wagner Archive's efforts are providing some assurance that union information will be available in the future. However, the focus of the Archive is New York City unions and selected national unions. 87.9% of the websites from the largest unions are not being thoroughly archived.

The decision to only research unions with 10,000 or more members for the Appendix 2 study was made because an approximation of the whole population could be studied. Data, however, were collected from smaller unions and can be found in the supporting Refshare database.

ambitious compilations of U.S. labor union information from the 1990s. Data are primarily from the U. S. Department of Labor, Office of Labor-Management Standards (OLMS). Researchers today can find this information themselves from the OLMS's UnionReports.gov site, but data from the 1990s is not yet available electronically and these two volumes provide a means for retrieving the data. Besides OLMS data, the volumes provide information about union periodicals, industries, and collective bargaining agreements.

This is a very early effort to compile a bibliography of trade union publications. It lists library locations for union periodicals, constitutions, and proceedings. The libraries surveyed are Johns Hopkins University, the Department of Labor, the John Crerar Library, and the Library of Congress. Locations in the central office of the union or federation are also listed. This bibliography is well worth looking at, if only to read the names of the unions--Granite Cutters' International Association of America; The United Operative, Benevolent and Protective Association Mule Spinners of New England; International Trade Association of Hat Finishers, to name a few.

From the web description: This remarkable reference tool is in three volumes. It provides a subject index to the vast literature of the American union movement from its birth to World War II where none existed before and for which none has been created since.

The first volume in the set is a bibliographic essay which offers, a brief chronology of the history of each union covered and an authoritative bibliography of its convention proceedings, constitutions and journal titles from the creation of the union to 1941. For major unions or those the history of which is particularly interesting, substantive critiques of the union's publications are offered, as well, in volume 1. These brief essays frequently comment on the political point of view of the editors of the publications or describe the internal politics within the unions that were reflected in its publications.

Volumes 2 and 3 of the set index the actual publications of 53 trade unions and federations by subject. The second volume begins with a complete list of index headings. Users of this index should carefully peruse the entire 22 pages of this list before trying to use the index since its terminology is dated and some of the subjects selected are somewhat idiosyncratic.

This is the comprehensive and official site through which users can gain access to information about U.S. labor unions. Labor unions are required to file reports with the Office of Labor Management Standards regarding their activities, finances, and membership. Select "Union Search" to find annual financial reports (LM-2, LM-3, or LM-4) and Constitutions and Bylaws. Select "Download Yearly Data" to download key information for all unions filing reports in recent years. Selected collective bargaining agreements can also be viewed, printed, and downloaded from this site. The site is also called the Online Public Disclosure Room. Data from 2001- are available online.
