Winners Announced for Inaugural Essay Competition

Jonathan E. DeGraff
Cornell University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.ilr.cornell.edu/chrr
Thank you for downloading an article from DigitalCommons@ILR.
Support this valuable resource today!

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@ILR. It has been accepted for inclusion in Cornell HR Review by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@ILR. For more information, please contact catherwood-dig@cornell.edu.

If you have a disability and are having trouble accessing information on this website or need materials in an alternate format, contact web-accessibility@cornell.edu for assistance.
Winners Announced for Inaugural Essay Competition

Abstract
[Excerpt] On the afternoon of April 22, the Cornell HR Review held an awards ceremony for its annual essay competition. Open to all Cornell students, this year’s competition challenged students to respond to one of three prompts, which addressed such topics as talent management, the right to organize, and the essentiality of HR.

Keywords
essay competition, Cornell HR Review

Comments

Suggested Citation

Required Publisher Statement

Copyright by the Cornell HR Review. This article is reproduced here by special permission from the publisher. To view the original version of this article, and to see current articles, visit cornellhrreview.org.

This article is available at DigitalCommons@ILR: https://digitalcommons.ilr.cornell.edu/chrr/8
WINNERS ANNOUNCED FOR INAUGURAL ESSAY COMPETITION

Jonathan E. DeGraff

On the afternoon of April 22, the Cornell HR Review held an awards ceremony for its annual essay competition. Open to all Cornell students, this year’s competition challenged students to respond to one of three prompts, which addressed such topics as talent management, the right to organize, and the essentiality of HR. Prizes for the competition included $500 for first place and $400 for second, as well as in-kind prizes other top finishers.

The Review’s Editorial Board narrowed down the pool of entries to the competition’s four best, then an independent panel of judges representing the Review’s stakeholders (students, academicians, and HR professionals) determined the winners. This year’s final round judges panel included ILR School student Kurt Johnson (Cornell MILR ’10), ILR School professor Chris Collins, and Corning Incorporated HR manager Shay Barlow (Cornell BSILR ’03). Mr. Barlow keynoted the event, expounding his work experiences with Eaton, Microsoft, and Corning since graduating from the ILR School and expressing his support for the mission of the Review.

The event, which was emceed by CHRR vice president Ryan McAllister (Cornell MILR ’11), was attended by ILR School Dean Harry Katz and MILR Program Director Regina Duffey Moravek. Nathan Sheranian (MILR ’11) garnered the first place prize for his essay, A Fine Balance: Effectively Managing Growth and Contraction. “I was certainly caught off-guard,” Mr. Sheranian said about the win. “Each day, I am surrounded by brilliant and talented classmates, so I was not expecting to win…. Before coming to Cornell, my professional experiences were at fairly new organizations, scattered among several different functions outside of HR. As I moved from role to role, I kept seeing commonalities in talent management pitfalls in periods of growth and decline. Incidentally, these experiences were a major factor in my decision to pursue HR as a career, and the Cornell HR Review Essay Competition provided an ideal forum to articulate my observations.”

Second place for the competition went to John Sherman (BSILR ’11), whose essay offered three suggestions for managing through economic change. Additionally, Evan Fowler-Guzzardo (MILR ’10) was awarded third place, and Joshua Rosenberg Daneri (MILR ’11) took home an honorable mention.

Ann Kubricky (Cornell MILR ’11), who serves as president of the ILR Graduate Student Association and who also participated in the competition, noted the caliber and professionalism of the participants and organizers, commenting that she looks forward to participating in future CHRR functions. “Events like the HR Review competition encourage independent thought, friendly competition, and active participation. This was the first event offered to a MILR that was an open, voluntary, and scholastic competition; and I felt the students who competed, attended, and organized this event have a heightened interest in HR and the ILR School.”

Details regarding the next annual essay competition will be posted on the Review’s website in February 2011. The competition’s winning entries will be published in the Review later this month.

Jonathan E. DeGraff is a student at Cornell University, pursuing an MBA at the S.C. Johnson Graduate School of Management and an MILR at the School of Industrial & Labor Relations. He is also the founder and current president of the Cornell HR Review.