Opening Remarks

Dr. Neufeldt welcomed everyone to the 6th General Assembly meeting, and thanked the ILO for their support and generous hospitality in hosting this conference and General Assembly. He observed that an AGA was not held in 2002 due to the cancellation of the Paris meeting, with which GLADNET had hoped to run a concurrent meeting. The net effect of this is that there are actions that will require ratification at this meeting.

Dr. Neufeldt informed the audience that this would be the last time he addressed a GLADNET meeting as Chair, a position he has held since 1997.

Report on Activities

1. An Annual report, including the report from the Chair, the Operations Manager, and the Auditors, covering the years 2002-2003 was made available to meeting participants. It is available for viewing on the GLADNET website.

2. Edwin de Vos' Report on Programme Planning

Edwin de Vos' Report on Programme Planning. Edwin reviewed planning leading to programme just concluded. It was observed that while the attendance was low and, hence disappointing, the quality of presentations and participation had been excellent.

3. Discussion of meetings attended by GLADNET representatives over the past two years, as outlined in the Annual Report. These efforts worked at aligning GLADNET with partners.

Auditor's Report and Financial Report

Edwin de Vos, Treasurer, presented the Auditor’s Report for the year 2002. He also presented a summary report on revenue and expenses through October 2003.

Barbara Murray observed it would be helpful to have a breakdown of general revenue into various main sources such as funds received for the recent ILO project, other grants and contributions, rather than grouping these sources. She also suggested it would be helpful to know how much interest income there had been as contrasted with the previous year.
Concern regarding dropping membership was voiced. Michael Kamp inquired as to what the reasons for this might be. Edwin de Vos suggested that many organizations have fallen on harder times, and some have disappeared entirely. While maintaining GLADNET membership is a continuing challenge, Aldred Neufeldt suggested GLADNET might consider offering a specific service to governmental bodies in exchange for sustaining memberships.

Program discussion

Next meeting. Comments for GLADNET's new board regarding the program for the association's next meeting, were sought.

Barbara Murray believes that to achieve higher attendance, planning for the next meeting must begin immediately. GLADNET should aim for greater promotion so people can slot in the meeting for the new year. She suggests inviting a well-known speaker could be worthwhile.

A renowned speaker could be a costly initiative, however, it was suggested by Val Lawton, he / she could provide a telecast presentation.

Stig Larsson: believes that applicable research would be more appealing to some than bringing in a renowned speaker.

Moira Jones : would like to see greater involvement from PWDs, especially from developing countries.

The chair solicited comments regarding travel costs

Moira Jones: pointed out out there is often monies available for travel for developing countries.
Michael Kamp: with adequate planning ahead, GLADNET may be able to better tailor its program according to upcoming / current research.

Moira Jones: recommended GLADNET consider the Summit in Winnipeg, Manitoba (Canada) as a good venue. PWD's will be in attendance, and Disabled Persons' International (DPI) could assist GLADNET.

Discussion concerning next year's programme content

Barbara Murray: someone who's made a controversial statement in the field, such as the recent OECD study, which holds some influence over policy makers but, as in the OECD study, is questionable.

GLADNET as a network has a responsibility to respond to such reports, and have the potential to reach policy makers.

Edwin de Vos: more studies of this sort will surface in the next year. He pointed out that it is not just conference that is a membership service; the Infobase, GLADMail and the promotion of networking research. The question is how to make GLADNET service useful? What should the GLADNET role be? How can GLADNET promote research together?

Michael Kamp: is there the possibility of GLADNET being a portal to show where researchers to go? A place where new research is compiled and posted to members.

Aldred Neufeldt: How can GLADNET address the information overload, and 'weave through the noise' on behalf of membership?

Misako Nomura: Speaking from a Japanese perspective, GLADNET is not well publicized enough.

Aldred Neufeldt: Perhaps GLADNET needs to promote its excellence and quality; proposes establishing a publice relations campaign

Dorte Bernhard: recommends collaborating with others to disseminate GLADNET news and activities.

Barbara Murray: suggests identifying a topic, such as the "trend to privatization," and surveying the membership for feedback and opinion.

Stig Larsson: agrees on suggested topic of Barbara's, but suggests due to lack of research in the area, that the meeting might be held as a series of workshops.

Barbara Murray: suggests the OECD Report is a partial piece of research that justifies the trend to PWDs looking after themselves. With a year's notice, we may prompt initial research. At least, GLADNET can foster informed discussion.
Aldred Neufeldt: reminded participants that the OECD and ISSA reports were considered for critical analysis for today's meeting

Barbara Murray: suggests new board members Ilene Zeitzer would make an excellent discussant. Additionally, the Australian experience would be good to highlight.

Edwin de Vos: another topic the association might consider is 'anti-discrimination legislation in Europe,' for which there is a research available.

Bert Boekhoff: These two topics work well together, and could both be presented at the same meeting. Recommends presenting both to board and membership.

Dorte Bernhard: questioned GLADMail statistics

Val Lawton: currently, there are approx. 800 GLADMail recipients. GLADNET might consider establishing a threaded discussion group this year.
