Augusta, ME – Today Maine Governor John E. Baldacci announced a path-breaking initiative to end sweatshop exploitation in apparel and other industries around the world and in the United States. In a letter sent to all governors on February 28, Governor Baldacci proposes a new collaborative effort to use state government procurement as a tool level the playing field for ethical businesses and advance justice for sweatshop workers.

The State of Maine adopted the nation’s first sweatfree procurement law in 2001 to end taxpayer support for sweatshop abuses. The centerpiece of the law is a code of conduct requiring state contractors and subcontractors of apparel, textiles, and footwear to adhere to basic international fair labor standards. But “we can accomplish more together” the Governor noted in his letter to governors.

"There's power in numbers,” said Governor John E. Baldacci, D-Maine. “We've been doing great work on sweatfree procurement in Maine, but if we team up with other states we'll have even more influence in the global marketplace. Workers around the world deserve any influence or leverage we can bring to the table."

The Governor’s Coalition for Sweatfree Procurement and Workers’ Rights will consider a variety of strategies to end sweatshop abuses including cost-effective and reliable independent monitoring mechanisms of contractor and subcontractor manufacturing facilities. The coalition will also consider forming a purchasing consortium to allow states to leverage purchasing power in support of sweatfree supplier factories.

“The Governor’s Coalition for Sweatfree Procurement and Workers’ Rights is an enormously significant initiative in the anti-sweatshop movement,” said Bjorn Claeson, Director of SweatFree Communities, a national organization that supports and coordinates local sweatfree procurement campaigns and maintains an office in Maine. “Combined with a similar municipal effort led by the Mayor of San Francisco, it has the potential to create a hundred billion dollar market for sweatfree products and services which would completely transform apparel and other industries where sweatshops are pervasive.”

In addition to Maine, the states of California, Illinois, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania have adopted sweatfree procurement laws, along with over 60 cities, counties, and school districts.

Re: Formation of a Governor’s Coalition for Sweatfree Procurement

Dear Governor:

I am writing to invite you to join me in a new collaborative effort to level the playing field for ethical businesses and advance justice for workers laboring in substandard work environments — commonly known and referred to as “sweatshops” — worldwide.

Sweatshop conditions in apparel and other industries around the world and in the United States are well documented. Young women and children work long hours for poverty wages in inhumane conditions until they are worn out and unemployable. These abuses cause untold human suffering and economic and political volatility across the globe.

State government procurement is a tool which we can use responsibly to address this serious problem, as procurement laws and policies may be implemented to stop contractors and vendors that do business with State governments from relying on sweatshop labor as a tool to underbid responsible contractors or to maximize their profits inhumanely.

In 2001, for example, the State of Maine adopted a sweatfree procurement law to end unsuspecting taxpayer support for sweatshop abuses and to help create market demand for fair labor standards. The centerpiece of that law is a contractor- and subcontractor-binding code of conduct, which includes the requirement that contractors and subcontractors adhere to basic international standards of workplace fairness and safety.

Presently we are updating our statutes and our rules to keep them current with emerging best practices. Most significantly, we are taking steps to guarantee sweatfree procurement by examining protocols for independent monitoring and inspecting of supplier factories.

Yet we can accomplish more together. If we work together as States, we can both learn from each other and better leverage our resources.

I propose that we form a coalition of Governors and States — as an initial step to best align our common experience and interests and resources. Our coalition will explore and develop strategies soon after formation, including the possibility of joining existing coalitions of universities and emerging coalitions of cities already working together to put an end to procurement from sweatshops. Moreover, the coalition could consider the use or formation of a consortium—such as the Worker Rights Consortium, which has worked well for universities—to investigate complaints of States' contractors and subcontractors subjecting their workers to sweatshop conditions.

If you are interested in joining this new and important coalition I am proposing, please review the attached resolution, sign it and return it if possible, or contact my staff with any changes that might be necessary for you to come on board. My lead staffperson on this initiative is Alan Stearns, who can be reached in my office at (207) 287-3531 (voice); (207) 287-1034 (fax); or alan.stearns@maine.gov (e-mail). Our goal is to have an initial conference call of signatory or interested coalition members by April 1, 2006. I hope you will come to the table with staff assignments, resources to support their leadership, and recognition that with focus and coordination we can make progress.

Please join me in standing up for good jobs and justice for workers in the United States and around the world. I look forward to working with you.

Sincerely,

John E. Baldacci
Governor
