Consumers now have a tool to ensure that they do not support forced and child slave labor this holiday season. The new Free2Work iPhone app gives consumers product ratings as they shop for products like Hasbro’s Beyblades, Pillow Pets, Apple’s iPad, and many more top holiday products.

About Free2Work

The website Free2Work.org [1] and just launched Free2Work iPhone application [2] have been expanded to include ratings of this year’s hottest holiday items based on the companies’ policies to address child labor and forced labor. Consumers cooking up their favorite Thanksgiving dishes will also be interested in new ratings of key baking ingredients such as vanilla, cloves, cocoa, sugar and oranges. Free2Work is a collaboration of the Not for Sale Campaign (NFSC) and the International Labor Rights Forum (ILRF). It provides consumers with important information on the labor standards and business practices of the companies who manufacture their favorite products so that they can further their engagement in ending forced and child labor through their consumption decisions.

The Free2Work site recently added a rating section and information on certification systems like Fair Trade, Rainforest Alliance, and Goodweave. Bama Athreya, Executive Director of the International Labor Rights Forum said, “A broad range of certification programs exist that claim to protect worker rights. The volume and variety of these systems and product labels can be confusing to consumers. Free2Work helps to reduce the confusion and demonstrate to consumers how each program differs.”

About the iPhone Application

The mobile application, Free2Work which is supported by Juniper Networks (www.JuniperNetworks.com [3]), and was named one of the “11 Great Apps for 2011” by the SF AppShow, is also available for consumers this holiday season as a free download on iTunes. “The Free2Work application will provide conscious consumers with valuable information and company evaluations at the moment they need it most – when they shop,” explains Not For Sale Campaign President, David Batstone.

The Free2Work rating program is an ongoing joint endeavor by the Not for Sale Campaign and International Labor Rights Forum and is supported by Juniper Networks and the US Department of State’s...
Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons. Additional products will be rated during and after the holiday season and consumers are encouraged to indicate what products they would like to see rated in the future.
